ATTORNEY GENERAL RAOUL RELEASES HOLIDAY SAFE SHOPPING GUIDE

Raoul's Annual Guide Details Recalled Children's Products of 2022

Chicago — Attorney General Kwame Raoul today released his annual Safe Shopping Guide highlighting recently recalled hazardous toys, children's products and household items to help Illinois families shop safely this holiday season. The 2022 Safe Shopping Guide includes detailed descriptions and photographs of children's products recalled in the last year, including children's toys, clothing and all-terrain vehicles (ATVs) that pose choking and fire hazards.

Attorney General Raoul is urging people to be aware of products such as e-bikes, toy guns and headphones with batteries that can overheat, ignite and pose a fire hazard. Some other products, like flashlights and electric bicycles have been recalled due to battery latch malfunctions, which result in batteries falling out unexpectedly and potentially causing a fall hazard. Attorney General Raoul also warns parents and caregivers of clothing and toys with lead levels exceeding the allowable limit and clothes that do not meet the anti-flammability standards.

Very importantly, Attorney General Raoul wants to ensure that everyone understands the risks posed by a wide variety of electronic items, including small electronic toys, electronic key fobs, and other non-toy items that are powered by small button batteries. If children are able to access those small batteries and ingest them or insert them in their nose or ears, very serious internal burns can result.

"The holiday season has quickly arrived, which means parents, guardians and caregivers are already shopping for the little ones on their holiday lists. I encourage shoppers to reference my office's annual Safe Shopping Guide to ensure a safe holiday," Raoul said. "This simple guide will help shoppers avoid buying recalled products and also tells consumers what to do if they already have a recalled item in their home."

Since January, there have been many product recalls by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission that are focused on protecting children. The Attorney General's easy-to-use resource can help families avoid purchasing recalled products on the secondhand market and identify items that may already be in their homes. The guide also describes actions families can take if they do have recalled products in their homes.

This year, some of the products parents, guardians and caregivers should watch out for include toys, music sets, touch books, pacifiers, tethers and rattles that have been recalled due to choking hazards from parts that can break off. The guide also describes potentially flammable sleepwear.

Attorney General Raoul is also urging people to be aware of bunk beds that pose entrapment and strangulation hazards due to a wide space between a ladder step and the cross-member of the dresser-top hutch. In addition to products for infants and young children, Raoul's guide highlights items for older children, such as youth ATVs and safety helmets that do not meet safety requirements, posing a risk of serious injuries or death.

While many recalled items have been removed from store shelves, consumers should check the Safe Shopping Guide to make sure they are not planning to give a product as a gift that a retailer or secondhand vendor is still inadvertently selling. Buyers should also check the product guidelines to make sure that the products they are buying are appropriate for the age of the recipient.

Consumers can view and download the 2022 Safe Shopping Guide at the Attorney General's website. Parents and caregivers also receive recall alerts directly by signing up at recalls.gov.

A Message from Attorney General Kwame Raoul

The holiday season is here once more and with it, the rush of holiday shopping. Whether you will be visiting businesses in your community or taking advantage of the convenience of online shopping, it is important to be aware of hazardous toys, clothes and other children's products that have been recalled throughout the year. If you have a child on your shopping list, I recommend checking my office's annual Safe Shopping Guide to be informed of the dangers associated with some children's products – and to avoid purchasing an item that has been recalled.

This year, the Safe Shopping Guide highlights nearly 100 recalls issued by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission during 2022. Descriptions of the toys, furniture, children's clothing and other children's products are accompanied by photographs to make hazardous products easier to identify. Descriptions also include actions families can take if they already have any of these products in their homes.

Electronic items top the wish lists of many children and youths, and I urge parents and guardians to exercise caution before purchasing products, such as e-bikes, headphones and other toys, that use batteries. The guide highlights a number of these products that use batteries, which can overheat, ignite and pose a fire hazard. Other products, such as e-bikes, have been recalled for malfunctions that cause batteries to fall out unexpectedly, potentially causing a hazard to the child using it. The guide also describes toys, electronic key fobs and other non-toy items powered by small button batteries. Curious children can ingest or insert those batteries in noses and ears, resulting in serious burns.

I am also urging families to be aware of recalled toys with parts that can break off and become choking hazards, or which contain levels of lead or other harmful chemicals that can result in poisoning or skin irritation. The guide also includes children's clothing that does not meet flammability standards or that poses strangulation hazards. It is particularly critical that parents, grandparents and guardians are aware of products including bunk beds that pose entrapment and strangulation hazards, which can result in serious injuries or death. In addition, the guide highlights toys and products for older children, such as youth all-terrain vehicles and safety helmets that do not meet safety requirements, posing a risk of serious injury or death.

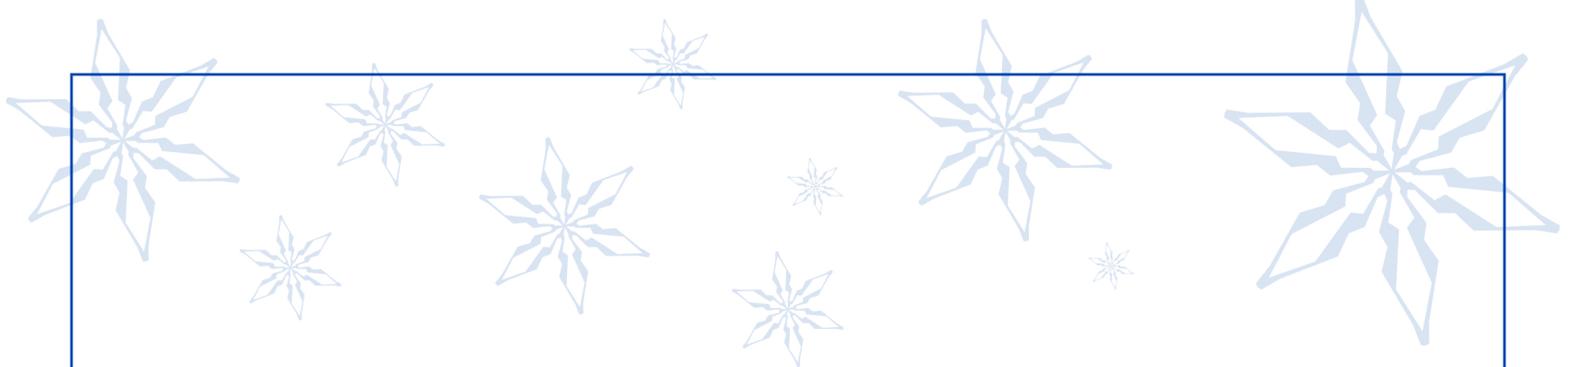

Even though recalled products should not be sold, families should ensure they do not have these items in their homes. As shoppers visit secondhand websites, they should be aware these products may still be available, making it particularly important that shoppers check the guide before shopping. Information in the guide can help you avoid purchasing toys or items that could harm a child you love. Parents and caregivers can receive recall alerts directly by signing up at recalls.gov. Current and previous editions of the Safe Shopping Guide can be found on the Office of the Attorney General's website.

May all Illinois families enjoy a safe and healthy holiday season.

Sincerely,

Kwame Raoul
Attorney General
