Safe Shopping Guide
LISA MADIGAN
ILLINOIS ATTORNEY GENERAL
Once again the gift-giving season has arrived, and as always, I encourage families to take some time during this busy shopping time to be aware of dangerous toys and children’s products.
Since 2007, when 44 million units of children’s products were recalled, my office has issued the Safe Shopping Guide to help families avoid dangerous toys and children’s products and understand other potential dangers to their children.

This resource guide provides you with detailed descriptions and photographs of toys, cribs and furniture, children’s clothing, and other products recalled by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission this year.
In addition to watching out for these products on store shelves, at yard and garage sales, and on secondhand websites such as Craigslist and eBay, it is important to take a few minutes to ensure that you do not already have any of these products in your home.

This year, the Safe Shopping Guide also includes helpful information for parents who are considering purchasing a smartphone, tablet, video game or other Internet-accessible device for their children. These purchases are some of the most popular for families during the holiday season. This year’s guide provides a how-to for parents and caregivers to set age-appropriate limits on these devices so they can decide what their children access online.

Recent studies show that an increasing number of children are left to use mobile and Internet-accessible devices on their own, exposing children to the dangers of the Internet at increasingly younger ages. Parents and caregivers must be diligent in understanding the capabilities of the devices their children are using and take steps to ensure a positive and appropriate digital culture inside and outside of their homes.

I urge you to read through this guide as you begin your gift buying. Ensuring that you do not have any recalled products already in your home and taking the appropriate precautions when purchasing new Internet-accessible devices for your children will help lead to a healthy and safe holiday season and new year for you and your family.

Have a happy—and safe—holiday season!

Creating and supporting a positive digital culture can help your children understand how to use technology appropriately and foster positive relationships online. Below are some tips to help your family get started.

Purchase technology (e.g., gaming device, phone, tablet, etc.) that is appropriate for your child.

A 2015 study found that 88% of American teens ages 13 to 17 have or have access to a mobile phone of some kind, and a majority of teens (73%) have smartphones.

Most children started using mobile devices in their first year of life.

It is a huge responsibility for a child to have 24/7 access to any cell phone, let alone a smartphone with Internet access. To access the Internet on a smartphone, one must have a data plan or use Wi-Fi. It is possible to opt out of the data plan, which means the child would need Wi-Fi to access the Internet. Being aware of your options and the capabilities of technology in your home is important so you can set appropriate rules and educate your children accordingly.

Help your children set up their new devices.

When you help your child set up their new technology, you will also learn what your kids can do and access through the device. You can set up your parental controls and restrictions at this time so they are aware of what you are allowing them to do or not do. You are learning alongside them (it doesn’t hurt to play around with the device without them first too). They will know you understand the device as well as they do, whereas often kids are much more savvy with their technology than their parents.

Review appropriate websites, apps, and games for each child.

It is also important to monitor the games, sites and apps your children use. Some of the most popular games among kids are actually rated M (Mature) or A (Adult). Before allowing a game, website or app to be used, understand its purpose and what it is exposing to your child.

One way to stay informed is to view the free apps in the App Store on your or your child’s smartphone. Another is to review Common Sense Media’s ratings for games, movies, apps etc. that you can use to help you determine what is appropriate for your children.

http://www.commonsensemedia.org/

Discuss why strong passwords are important and how to create them.

Explaining the importance of passwords is especially vital with children who are new to technology and are creating profiles and passwords for the first time. Passwords should not be made up of easily guessed information such as a pet’s name or birth year. And, passwords should be kept private and not shared with friends. Check out the following video for some password-creating advice for children:

http://www.netsmartzkids.org/LearnWithClicky/ThePasswordRap.

Obtain all passwords for your children’s devices and the apps and sites they use (e.g., email, Facebook, Instagram, etc.).

While 91% of parents believe they are well informed about what their teens do online and on their cell phones, only 21% of teens think their parents are very well informed about their online behavior. Obtaining your children’s passwords to their online profiles will help to keep you informed. Most of the sites and apps your children use have ways to communicate “under the radar,” so being able to log into their profile as if you are them is a helpful way to see what’s going on under the surface.
It is also important to get their passcodes for cell phones to enable you to check text messages and both outgoing and incoming calls.

Review the definition of private information with children.

More and more teens are sharing personal information on social networking sites. Approximately 92% of girls and boys aged 12-17 years use their real names on their most used social networking profile. Furthermore, about 90% use a photo of themselves, 80% share their birthdate, 70% post what city or town they live in and more than 75% of teens aged 14-17 post what school they attend. Discuss why this information should be kept private and how others on the Internet accessing their information could use it (e.g., reviewing for college admission or potential employment, identity theft, locating the child, impersonating the child and striking up an online relationship).

Develop and consistently enforce household rules for time limits and use of devices, apps and websites.

Rules should consist of setting time limits for technology use (including cell phones/texting), determining what social networking sites they can sign up for and requiring that they share their passwords with you for all sites and apps they use. Most, if not all, of the apps and games kids use have age restrictions; know and enforce these. To find age restrictions, review the terms of use of the site, app or game. Rules can evolve as kids show responsibility and get older, but remember to be consistent with the rules and consequences you develop.

Research states that children are spending about seven hours a day on technology, and excessive media use can lead to health and educational problems in the future. It’s important to establish technology-free zones in the house where kids can go to study, relax, do homework, play with friends and sleep.

Be aware of these revealing statistics:

Mobile devices are introduced to children very early in life.

In a 2015 study of 350 parents, most children had access to mobile devices in their household, and by age four, three out of four children had their own mobile device. At age two, most children were using mobile devices on a daily basis and spending comparable screen time on television and the mobile device.

Almost 75% of teens with cell phones have smartphones.

A 2015 study found that 88% of American teens ages 13 to 17 have or have access to a mobile phone of some kind, and a majority of teens (73%) have smartphones. Fifty-eight percent of teens have or have access to a tablet computer.

91% of teens go online from a mobile device, at least occasionally.

Fully 91% of teens go online from mobile devices at least occasionally, and 94% of these mobile teens go online daily or more often, compared with 68% of teens who do not use mobile devices to go online.

Internet use is nearly constant for some teens.

Teens ages 13 to 17 are also going online frequently. Aided by the convenience and constant access provided by mobile phones, 92% of teens report going online daily with 24% using the Internet “almost constantly,” 56% going online several times a day, and 12% reporting once-a-day use. Just 6% of teens report going online weekly, while 2% go online less often.

Know your child’s CYBERWORLD Tips for Parents

1. Maintain open communication with your child about technology and the appropriate uses of it.

2. Make sure your child knows they cannot be anonymous on the Internet.

3. Talk to your child about what should never be posted online and the dangers of posting too much information.

4. Explain that posting online is just like writing in permanent marker – it cannot be erased.

5. Engage your child in continuous conversations about how to behave online.

6. Complete a “use agreement” with your child and talk about respecting others online. Establish and enforce household rules for technology usage.

7. Discuss why strong passwords are important, how to create them and the need to keep them private. Obtain all passwords for devices and apps.

8. Stay informed on your child’s Internet habits, review their user history and observe their social media activity. Know who their friends and followers are.

9. Be aware of changes in your child’s behavior that may indicate cyberbullying.

10. Never threaten to take away your child’s phone or Internet access. This could prevent them from approaching you in the future about online problems.

Do you have a question about your child’s cyberworld habits, activities or language? Call the Attorney General’s E-Info Hotline at 1-888-414-7678 or email an Internet Safety Specialist at e-info@atg.state.il.us. All questions are welcome.

AGREEMENT TO ABIDE BY THE RULES

PARENTS: PLEASE DISCUSS THIS AGREEMENT WITH YOUR CHILDREN, SIGN IT TOGETHER AND POST IT NEAR YOUR COMPUTER.

I WILL
not give out personal information such as my address, telephone number, parents’ work addresses/telephone numbers, or the name of my school without my parents’ permission.

I WILL
tell my parents right away if I come across information that makes me feel uncomfortable.

I WILL
never agree to get together with someone I “meet” online without first checking with my parents. If my parents agree to the meeting, I will be sure that it is in a public place and bring my mother or father along.

I WILL
never send a person my picture or anything else without first checking with my parents.

I WILL
not respond to any messages that are mean or in any way make me feel uncomfortable. It is not my fault if I get a message like that. If I do, I will tell my parents right away so they can contact the Internet service provider.

I WILL
talk with my parents so that we can set up rules for going online. We will decide upon the time of day that I can be online, the length of time I can be online, and appropriate areas for me to visit. I will not access other areas or break these rules without their permission.
